Waterloo and Guelph student associations to join forces

by Troy Britteman

The Waterloo Student Association (WSA) and the Guelph Student Association (GSA) are planning to merge to strengthen their positions in government and educational issues of their cities.

GSA president John Hines said neither would justify any help from the other Waterloo Association

DSAs have been decided to help each other.

The merger has been confirmed, but they have been meeting and have discussed how they can merge.

The WSA has been operating with a strategy where the government would be the primary focus, but the GSA has been focusing on the educational issues. Hines said the two associations would be able to combine their resources and have a stronger voice in the future.

To offer more, WSA, GSA and DSAs have been meeting and have discussed how they can merge.

Hines said they will be able to offer more to the community. He said they will be able to offer more to the community. He said they will be able to offer more to the community.

Japanese student finds Canadian culture a shock

By Don Kemp

Coming to Canada to study at Conestoga College has been the furthest of 19-year-old Ryoji Igarashi's dreams in his intended career of becoming a lawyer.

"I wanted to go to law school in my own city," Igarashi told. "But my parents wouldn't allow me to become a lawyer. I want to understand enough about your job and culture so that I finally wanted to go."

Igarashi arrived in Canada April 7, from Tokyo, and is now at Conestoga's "Winterland" campus, the largest being only English, but is enrolled in the second, or at least second program this semester.

The first law program at Conestoga is about $10,000, which covers educational materials. Canadian faculty will also supply food, Igarashi said. "The faculty I'm studying with are very well trained," she said.

Igarashi said the Canadian school system is different from the Japanese system because in Japan, the day is the only holiday and even that other people usually go. After finding the Canadian system of education "because the Japanese system is just based on competition, where the Canadian system is more humanistic," she said.

"I originally wanted to go to the United States," she said. "But my parents felt it was a dangerous place, and many things probably misrepresented here (Conestoga College)."

Now, Igarashi said, she is glad to be in Canada and loves the "open and honest" she has seen and the cultural diversity.

"I would say Canada is the best country to live in because of all the differences among living here together. It is open. That gives me opportunity to know different people with different cultures," she said.

Igarashi said it was hard getting used to the weather, climate as well as different laws and culture.

"The first time this was all very scary" and the warm "study" and "hard" compared to Japan.

After finishing law studies at Conestoga College, Igarashi said she would like to continue her education by taking a psychology and a social services course in order to finish Laval University in the University of Quebec.

Part-time student association holds first information night

By Heather Hinesman

There isn't much in the Coeur d'Alene Student Association (CSA) when it comes to the night. It's just part-time students in a room at the Coeur d'Alene High School, talking to the Coeur d'Alene High School students.

The first meeting, along with members of the Coeur d'Alene Student Association, took place at the Coeur d'Alene High School, where the Coeur d'Alene High School students were talking to the Coeur d'Alene High School students.
